Faith and reason are like two wings on which the human spirit rises to the contemplation of truth (Pope St. John Paul II, Fides et Ratio, 1998). The goal of this document is to provide our army with better weapons by explaining why we believe what we believe about the subjects presented below. Part I: Both pro-choice and pro-life groups have argued forcefully to defend their respective positions for and against abortion. Frequently, however, persons on both sides have used ambiguous terminology, incoherent argumentation, and even appeals to emotion to convey their message. The following contribution to the ongoing discussion is a pro-life position built from the ground up, written primarily for the benefit of pro-life leadership. Part I aims to show that an argument in favor of abortion cannot have the mother as its starting point because such an argument begins at Question 6 without sufficiently addressing Questions 1 through 5. Part II: Today, there are some who argue for the personhood of certain animals and machines because these animals and machines have a high level of functional ability. By incorrectly identifying personhood with functional ability, these men and women knowingly or unknowingly deny the personhood of many low-functioning human beings, thereby placing human lives in grave danger of manipulation, torture, and disposal. A coherent definition of person that recognizes all human beings as people is of the highest importance for the preservation of human society because only such a definition can permanently enshrine the dignity and equality of all human beings in civil law. Part III: In contemporary western culture, sexual behavior is often...
