Excerpt: . . . swimming into his ken signs of new factors that will so affect mens views as to lead them out of the arid wastes of materialism and the dark valleys of agnosticism. Were there no other hope, courage may be taken even from the conclusions of Science herself. F as est ab hoste doceri. Let the very law of Science, the principle of perpetual integration and dissolution--manifesting itself with no less assertiveness in the realm of human ideas than in the world of matter--assure us that, as in the history of the past the believing and the scientific eras have succeeded each other as systole C. S. D: 53 lifl the progress of human develop--;-1r1. ent-, : so-fthe freethought and unbelief of our day will, iuhentlthe ltime is ripe, be displaced by a new and settled faith, in constructing which Science herself shall have contributed no unimportant materials. Theology (the jterm is used in its widest and an unsectarian sense) is undergoing a process of transformation, and the crisis of transformation, the surging of new life-blood through vein and nerve, causes agony though it augurs health. The blood of many martyrs was needed to be publicly spilt to form the seed of the Christian Church; the secret crushing of innumerable hearts, the estrangement--of many from old-time ideals, has been the toll levied by the cosmic process before that Church should attain to larger life and strength. Humanity, by educating itself to think scientifically, is putting...
