NeWest Press. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, Minor Keys: A Romantic Comedy, David Belke, For David Belke, writing plays took a new direction when he began thinking about smaller characters - ones with modest dreams and quiet ambitions. Inspiration struck on a trip to Disney World at an out-of-the-way jazz club - atmosphere; smooth, calming music; dim lights; musicians lost in their music; staff floating amidst tables; patrons. Jazz has never been mainstream. It would suit a cast of modest characters with small dreams and quiet ambitions. Somebody should write a play. Quickly Belke scribbled down his ideas on a Pleasure Island doodle pad. Characters were born in that moment. Like an instrument in a jazz combo, each character would have an opportunity to contribute to the whole. One character's story would take the lead for a while, then slide back to support another. And like a jazz composition, there would be no breaks in the play - scenes smoothly crossfade, sometimes with a remark, sometimes by a character moving, sometimes because a character simply demands attention. And throughout the play there would be music - sometimes in the background, sometimes in a live performance. Jazz rhythms would shape the play. Minor key music for minor key people! (1 act; 4 men; 3 women).
